Governor Proclaims Home Indoor Air Quality Month in North Dakota

BISMARCK, N.D. – Governor John Hoeven has proclaimed October 2007 as Home Indoor Air Quality Month in North Dakota. The event is held to encourage North Dakotans to learn more about indoor air quality issues.

“Because people spend a great deal of time inside, maintaining a healthy indoor environment is important to the health of everyone,” said State Health Officer Terry Dwelle, M.D. “Becoming aware of indoor air quality issues is the first step in ensuring that our homes, businesses and public buildings have clean indoor air.”

Scientific research indicates that indoor air may be more polluted than outdoor air and that many people spend about 90 percent of their time indoors. Thus, for many people, the risks to health may be greater from exposure to pollutants indoors than outdoors. In addition, people who may be exposed to indoor air pollutants for the longest periods of time are often those most susceptible to the effects of indoor air pollution. Such groups include the young, the elderly and the chronically ill, especially those who suffer from respiratory or cardiovascular disease.

Many factors can contribute negatively to the quality of the air we breathe indoors, including lead dust, carbon monoxide, secondhand tobacco smoke, radon, asbestos, biological contaminants and even certain household products.
